"Love above Confrontation"

Locked in a moment of confrontation, Titian's "Venus With a Mirror", and Picasso's "Seated Woman" do not realise that another world exists that values them both for their differences. Through the open window we glimpse this other world in Chagall's folkloric pair of lovers, who enjoy the freedom that only love can offer. Beneath them we catch a glimpse of Chen's beloved Stahle of Liberty and Twin Towers. Painted in 1993, it is a work of eternal, and newly poignant truth.

"Neo-Iconography" is complex, demanding and ultimately rewarding in a thousand subtle ways. There is a multiplicity of icons from different ages, different cultures, different original intents. To grasp the power, even partially, brings savoury rewards. Both the emotional heart and meditative mind are touched. Images of West and East juxtapose and interact in a profound philosophical synthesis which is simultaneously beautiful and painfully disturbing. There is a visual language here, in a bursting of creation, which is not only richly sensuous but has something to say that humanity dares not ignore." L. Jeppson
